Description

A distinguished 17th-century English armchair crafted in rich walnut and upholstered in a traditional tapestry fabric. This early piece embodies the sculptural presence and craftsmanship of the period, combining robust construction with decorative refinement. The walnut frame features turned legs, carved arm supports, and subtle scrollwork that highlight the artisan's hand. Its warm patina, softened edges, and natural wear speak to centuries of use and care. The tapestry upholstery, secured with decorative nailhead trim, adds texture and historical character, complementing the dark tones of the wood. Light signs of use are present, consistent with its age, and contribute to its authenticity rather than detract from its elegance. With its commanding silhouette and
