Description

This desk illustrates the great mastery of tubular brass furniture in mid-20th-century French high-end decoration. The structural design relies on a crossed "X" base (curule inspiration), stiffened by a large central tubular stretcher. The junction points of the structure are highlighted by elegant molded brass rings. The piece offers a rectangular clear glass writing surface, topped at the rear by a gradin (a raised shelf). The latter is supported by slender small columns finished with finials, and flanked laterally by two curved brackets, providing an airy and sophisticated finish to the piece. Condition report: Good overall condition. The solid brass structure displays a natural and even patina of use, with minute traces of oxidation inherent to its age. The two glass plates are intact (likely showing surface
