Description

An elegant set of three modular side tables, Model 777, designed by Afra and Tobia Scarpa for Cassina and dating from the 1960s. Crafted from wood with a dark walnut finish, they feature an extremely clean and minimalist silhouette, typical of the finest Italian modernist design of the period. The geometric structure, characterized by paneled legs and precise proportions, gives the tables a strong architectural presence while maintaining a remarkable visual lightness. The three elements can be used together as modular side tables or separately as accent tables. The interlocking system allows them to be stacked completely one under the other, a practical and elegant solution that makes them particularly versatile even in contemporary settings. Original Cassina production, with the brand name present
