Description

Terracotta funerary oushebti - Egypt, Late Period (600-300 B.C.) 9 cm, Egyptology
Charming terracotta funerary oushebti dating from the Egyptian Late Period, c. 600-300 B.C. It depicts a male figure in the guise of Osiris, according to traditional Osirian iconography, in a mummiform position. These small funerary figurines were placed in large numbers in tombs. Their role was to accompany the deceased into the afterlife and to take the place of the deceased for agricultural work in the funerary world. These small funerary figurines were deposited in large numbers in tombs. The copy presented is in good original condition. The cracks visible in the photographs are not cracks, but original firing defects, testifying to its antique manufacture. The piece presented is in good original condition. Height: 9
