Description

Oil on panel. The Prince of Lilies, this fresco rising from the ruins of Knossos like a whisper from Minoan Crete, embodies an exhilarating freedom that seems to defy the weight of millennia. In his graceful, determined gait, adorned with a crown of feathers and surrounded by sacred flowers, we sense an absolute communion with nature, where elegance is not a social constraint, but a state of mind. There's something deeply moving in his stylized silhouette: a lightness of being that defies the rigidity of other ancient cultures, reminding us that there was a time when power was clothed in flowers and authority expressed through free, harmonious movement within an eternal garden. It's the image of a humanity unafraid of its senses, an ode to the youth of a world where freedom
