L'OEuvre: An oil on wood from the mid-19th century, demonstrating a perfect mastery of the academic technique. The artist uses delicate modeling for the face, playing with subtle transitions of flesh tones that recall the softness of a child's skin. The workmanship is while the face is treated with precision, the clothes and background the clothes and background have a freer, more vigorous touch, typical of the Romantic period. give the blue of the cape an intense depth, while a fading technique while a hand-fading technique (attested by the fingerprint at bottom right) was used to blend the shadows and create an effect of atmospheric effect. This direct approach to the subject gives the portrait a vitality and psychological presence for the period. Mastery of color, with striking contrasts between the blue of the cape and the incarnate of the face. Visible handiwork reinforces the uniqueness of this work.
