Important Empire-style secrétaire of Emilian origin, crafted in walnut and dating to the late 18th century. The piece stands out for the architectural elegance of its forms, typical of the Neoclassical style, featuring front columns complete with capitals and gilded bronze details that embellish the structure. The drop-leaf top conceals a refined interior punctuated by small drawers, open compartments, and decorative arches, designed for correspondence and the storage of documents and precious objects. The writing surface, covered in original green leather, adds further charm and functionality to the piece. Completely original in every part, it also retains its period hardware, an element of particular significance for its authenticity and collectible value. The warm patina of the walnut and the linearity of its proportions make this secrétaire a prime example of high-quality Emilian cabinetmaking from the late 18th century to the early Empire period.
