Description

Blanche Lettale corolla vase (1901-1990) In the second half of the 20th century, Jacques Roux and Blanche Lettale explored the stylistic possibilities of earthenware. In a spare, innovative style, the latter offered vases with organic shapes, often with monochrome or two-tone glazes. This pretty handkerchief vase is one of the pieces produced by Blanche Lettale. It is multi-lobed, and appears to open like a flower. The exterior is a matte enamel, with a chalky texture contrasting with the interior, bright green like a young leaf. The format of this vase and the originality of its shape make it a piece as rare as it is striking. The vase is in very fine condition, and is signed in relief under its base.
