Description

Lovely little "en-cas" table resting on four slightly curved legs. The body is completely open, forming a niche. The waistband is slightly curved. The sides are pierced with two small star-shaped openings for transport, as it was customary to conceal this piece of furniture during the day. The whole is topped with a wooden tray. This amusing little piece of furniture, called a "bedside table" in Voltaire's philosophical dictionary, is described as "a convenient piece of furniture which is placed near a bed and on which several utensils are placed". In the niche, was often placed the nécessaire allowing to take a snack, hence the name "table à en-cas". Dimensions: height 79 cm width 49 cm depth 32 cm niche opening: height 19 cm width
