Description

A refined pair of floral still lifes attributed to Laura Bernasconi, known as "Laura dei Fiori" (Rome, 1622-1675), one of the most highly regarded Roman painters of the 17th century, specializing in botanical and decorative representation. The works depict sumptuous vases brimming with colorful flowers arranged with great compositional elegance against dark backgrounds of intense Baroque charm. The canvases feature a rich floral repertoire--tulips, lilies, carnations, peonies, and other seasonal flowers--rendered with extraordinary chromatic sensitivity and meticulous detail. The raking light enhances the softness of the petals and the vibrancy of the hues, creating a refined contrast with the shadowy background in the style of 17th-century Roman still life. combined with the theatricality of the composition, lends the works great decorative elegance, making them ideal for classical interiors and collections of antique paintings. The frames, understated and luminous, further enhance the pictorial quality and the overall balance. A rare and prestigious example of 17th-century Roman floral painting, linked to the circle of great Baroque still lifes and the artistic sensibility of one of the few female protagonists of the Roman school of the time.
