Description

Art Nouveau bronze signed Léon Bardy, 1903, allegorical female figure. Remarkable Art Nouveau bronze sculpture signed Léon Bardy and dated 1903, depicting an elegant allegorical female figure in graceful upward movement. The composition shows a classically inspired female figure reaching for a branch, her body enveloped in a finely modeled drapery. The expressive posture, flowing lines and symbolic gesture perfectly reflect the refined aesthetics of the Belle Époque and Art Nouveau periods, when the female figure often embodied ideals such as beauty, victory, hope, peace or inspiration. The bronze features a beautiful, graceful and graceful sculpture. The bronze has a beautiful old dark patina, highlighting the quality of the modeling, visible particularly in the folds of the drapery, the attitude of the figure and the textured architectural background. The work rests on an architectural display base, clad in gilded textile, giving it a strong, almost museum-like decorative presence. The work bears the inscription: "Léon Bardy to Dr. Braun" 1903. This dedication adds an extra historical and personal dimension to the sculpture, mentioning both the artist, the date and the name of Dr Braun associated with the piece. Refine and highly decorative bronze, ideal for collectors of Art Nouveau sculpture, Belle Époque decorative arts, signed bronzes or classical allegorical figures.
