Description

A fine and imposing porcelain sculpture depicting the complex and elegant allegory of Prosperity and Abundance. The work is of high quality, attributed to the renowned Italian manufacturer Ginori and dating from the early 20th century. Often mistaken on the market for the subject of the Three Graces, the work actually represents a meticulous neoclassical allegorical composition, where each of the three female figures embodies a pillar of prosperity through finely modeled specific attributes. The central figure holds and tips a cornucopia brimming with fruit, a millennia-old symbol of generosity and earthly wealth. The figure on the right holds a rich, festooned floral garland, which unites the maidens and evokes the fertility of nature. The figure on the left gently raises her arm to observe a butterfly resting on
