Description

Amusing carved and stained wood inkwell featuring an expressive-looking bulldog head. Its amber-toned glass eyes give it a lively, almost anthropomorphic presence. The head opens thanks to a discreet push-button to reveal a brass and glass interior housing the receptacle for the ink. Black Forest work, late 19th/early 20th century. Good overall condition with light wear. Presence of a few old insect holes in the wood. The leather and red felt collar is missing. A few traces of ink consistent with its original function. Functional mechanism.
