"mobile sculptures". Frigerio became known for his integration of powerful brass reliefs and refined woodwork into architectural lines, elements perfectly showcased in this sideboard. Today, his works are highly sought-after by international collectors for their distinctive character and craftsmanship. The buffet's interior reflects the same luxury as its exterior. Opening the smoothly sliding doors reveals impeccably finished storage space. The interior drawers feature custom-made rectangular handles in carved brass, testifying to Frigerio's attention to detail right down to the nooks and crannies of this piece of furniture. This exceptional sideboard has remained in magnificent original condition. Given its age and nearly five decades of use, it shows some light signs of wear, quite typical of an authentic vintage piece of furniture from this period. We invite you to consult the photo gallery to fully appreciate the unique patina and detailed condition of the rosewood and brass. An iconic Frigerio creation, this rosewood and brass sideboard is an outstanding example of 1970s Italian design excellence. Combining aesthetics with functional elegance, it is sure to become the refined centerpiece of any well-groomed interior.
