Description

English painter (late 18th century) - The Connoisseur and Tired Boy. 39.5 x 32 cm (without frame) - 46 x 38 cm (with frame). Oil on canvas, in a wood frame. The painting reproduces the composition by Henry Robert Morland (London c.1730 - London 1797), engraved by Phillip Dawe and published by Robert Sayer in 1773. The work depicts two figures in a nocturnal interior: a connoisseur closely examining a small landscape painting by candlelight, while a young assistant yawns conspicuously behind him. The subject derives from the work of Henry Robert Morland, a London painter active in the second half of the 18th century, known for candlelight genre scenes and a gently ironic approach that runs through much of his output. Dawe's engraving, published by Sayer in 1773, enjoyed wide circulation and inspired several painted versions: the absorbed connoisseur and the bored boy embody a good-humoured critique of the collector and art expert, a central figure in 18th-century British visual culture. The handling of light, with the candle as the sole source of illumination, places the work within the candlelight painting tradition then widely practised in the British artistic milieu.
