Description

Fiery, powerful brushstrokes by brushes and brushes that dance to the sound of colors transforming into a smooth, sensual material. There's something violent and musical and musical, an unparalleled vibration and energy, dancing with the flight and energy of a first draft, yet very present and sensual. The work is executed in an isorel panel, and is presented in a silver-gray frame measuring 95 cm by cm and 65 cm and 92 cm by 65 cm for the painting alone. In excellent condition lower left and depicts two vases with yellow tulips on a red tablecloth. An unjustly forgotten unjustly forgotten, discovered by Van Dongen in 1927, who, in admiration of his talent, had him admitted to that year's Salon d'Automne the same year.
