Description

This exceptionally fine and ornate 19th-century miniature sculpture features a finely cast bronze flowerpot, from which emerge branches of natural red coral adorned with thirteen individually carved ivory cockatoos. Richly detailed and remarkably crafted, the composition combines precious materials with the exotic taste so prized in 19th-century European decorative arts. Each cockatoo is carved with remarkable precision and perched among organically shaped coral branches, creating a lively, sculptural naturalistic composition. The contrast between the warm patina of the bronze, the bright red of the coral and the finely aged ivory lends the piece extraordinary visual refinement. This charming object exemplifies the fascination with natural specimens and virtuoso craftsmanship.
