Description

A lantern made of thin strips of iron that have been twisted, coiled, and joined together to form the structure. The assembly, done entirely by hand, features a uniform arrangement of cold-formed metal strips, which are then joined together using ties and fastening points. The central body is adorned with small discs of colored glass (blue, green, and red) set within shaped iron frames. Handcrafted piece dating from the 1950s-1960s, typical of Venetian lanterns influenced by Moorish style. Condition: excellent overall condition; slight signs of use, glass intact, structure stable.
