Description

Elegant early 20th-century guillotine cigar cutter made of brass and wood, dating from the first half of the 1900s. Designed both as a functional smoker's accessory and as a refined office object, it reflects the refinement associated with the smoking culture of the period. The guillotine mechanism is made of brass, with a warm patina, contrasting elegantly with the wooden structure. The purity of its design and the quality of the materials give it a strong decorative presence, ideal for a smoking room, desk, library or collection of tobacco-related objects. Beyond its practical function, this piece is a charming example of early 20th-century smoker's know-how and accessories. Period: First half of the 20th century Materials: Brass and wood Dimensions: Height: 28 cm Width: 18
