Description

Here is a kneeling court lady in gray terra cotta, most probably from the Han dynasty. It is old and has its original patina. It has not undergone any restoration, it is natural, we have carried out a summary cleaning. We would like to point out some rubbing and traces of wear to the material and decorations, probably missing hands, and small missing parts in various places, all of which can be seen in the photos. However, the subject remains in a good state of preservation. For condition, please detail photos. Photos are an integral part of the description.
