Description

Fine pedestal bowl in blown and delicately hand-cut crystal, featuring a wide flared bowl with a scalloped rim, a stem decorated with vertical flutes, and a circular hollow foot. The slightly yellowish tint visible in the crystal's transparency is a characteristic indicator of late 19th-century European lead-crystal production, particularly common in Bohemian workshops and, to a lesser extent, in French ones. Condition: very good overall condition. However, a few small internal spots can be observed inside the hollow foot, comparable to light "moss-like" formations caused by impurities and residual humidity trapped inside during the making of the piece.
