Description

A delightful Japanese ceramic sculpture in the form of a goose, dating to the Meiji period (19th century). The bird is beautifully modelled with finely detailed plumage, an expressive head, and a soft celadon-toned glaze enhanced with brown feather decoration and hand-painted eyes. The removable pierced cover is integrated into the bird's back, giving the piece both sculptural presence and practical function, possibly as an incense burner or fragrance vessel. The quality of the modelling captures the character of the bird wonderfully, with its neck extended and beak open as if calling. Height: 24.5 cm. Condition: The cover has been broken and repaired. Both feet have old restorations. These repairs are reflected in the price. I do not normally buy damaged items, but I fell in love with this wonderful ceramic
