Description

An important and evocative 19th-century plaster sculpture group depicting three cherubs holding a basin, arranged in a complex three-dimensional composition characterized by great movement and a strong visual impact. The work is a preparatory studio model; the three cherubs, with their soft, child-like forms and lively expressions, are arranged around a central support in a typically Baroque style, featuring a dynamic interplay of bodies and a skillful compositional balance. The modeling reveals a surprising plastic vitality. The surfaces retain traces of the original carving, a direct testimony to the creative process. The presence of the 19th-century sculptor's stool, on which the model is displayed, is particularly fascinating. This element further enriches the historical and decorative value of the
