Description

Elegant miniature portrait depicting King Louis XVI, presented in an antique brass circular frame. This delicate depiction, which I believe under some reservations was executed in pencil or graphite and then finely enhanced with color, is a testament to fine craftsmanship. The artist has rendered the sovereign's features with finesse, as well as the details of his ceremonial costume. Particularity: beneath the paint appear gold leaves applied in reserve, intended to catch the light and magnify the work's effects of transparency and depth. This refined technique, frequently employed in 18th- and 19th-century miniatures and fixé sous verre, lends the piece a subtle, precious sheen. noted a slight veiling on the painting support
