Description

Kabuto - Myochin school Suji bachi kabuto atrib. Myochin, Edo period (1603 - 1868) This is a very heavy helmet, precisely made for true battle . In fact, it is the heaviest kabuto ever found in the Samurai gallery. The bowl in the form of heichoza bachi is in the sabiji design and is made of 62 plates, complemented by a nice tehen kanamono and nine gilded shinodare on four sides of the bowl. The fukigaeshi and mabizashi are made with a decorative brass fukurin edge with partial printed egawa deerskin. The partially gilded fukigaeshi also features decorative mimi ito lacing and two pairs of finely chiseled metal plaques with the family crest kamon "agari fuji no daimonji" in the form of wisterias Fuji and the character "Dai" ? meaning "large". This coat of arms was used as an alternative kamon by the

The helmet decoration (mitsu kuwagata dai) is decorated with openwork (sukashi) in the form of "Chinese grasses" karakusa and "wild boar's eye" inome. The four-piece shikoro of majestic appearance made of fluted surface parts is gilded and densely laced with odoshi ito and mimi ito of reddish orange color. It has four pieces of decorative fukurin fittings.
