Description

A refined example of early 20th-century British industrial design, this oak filing cabinet combines functionality with timeless craftsmanship. Made from solid oak, it features seven drawers with original brass handles and label holders, some with internal dividers; it was once used to store documents or workshop equipment. The warm patina and slight traces of wear testify to its authenticity and use, giving it both a functional and decorative character. The brass fittings contrast elegantly with the honey hue of the oak, adding a touch of sobriety and elegance. Perfect for interiors blending industrial heritage and modernity, this 1920s cabinet offers versatile storage space and a strong sculptural presence. Condition: slight signs of use in keeping with its age.
