Description

Elegant authentic 19th-century oil painting by R. Leroux. Signed and dated 1887, this original work on canvas depicts a delightful composition of wildflowers arranged in a glass vase. His dark, atmospheric floral aesthetic makes it ideal for a gallery wall, a vintage-inspired mantelpiece or a study/dark academia-style interior. The way the light illuminates the delicate petals against a dark background creates a deep, romantic atmosphere that a simple modern reproduction could never capture. Please note that the small marks visible in the photographs are due to the camera light picking up the texture of the brushstrokes; they are not paint misses. The painting is presented in a period-style French frame, with a profile known as "Chemin de Fer" or "Scoti", characterized by a deep, architectural groove that draws the eye to the work's dark composition. The frame is in carved wood, with a traditional gesso and bowl preparation, and features a refined three-tone finish. The inner and outer borders are adorned with gold leaf gilding in a muted, antique tone. The hollowed central part of the frame is patinated in an aged lichen green/water green shade, which matches perfectly with the botanical tones of the foliage and the transparency of the glass vase. The painting is in good original condition, with only very slight missing paint, mainly on the edges of the canvas. There is old crackling throughout, consistent with the age of the work. The frame has a beautiful, authentic patina of age, with slight wear revealing the red or gray bowl under the gilding in places. A few small traces, old rubs and cracks confirm its antique character. This is a true piece of history, hand-painted in France over 135 years ago. Artist: R.
