Description

A beautifully proportioned late Victorian armchair dating from circa 1890-1900, bridging the transition into the early Edwardian period, with elegant rolled arms, deep button-back upholstery, and classic turned front legs set on original brass and ceramic castors. This handsome antique armchair offers both exceptional comfort and timeless design, making it a wonderful addition to a refined living room, library, bedroom, or traditional country house interior. The generous proportions and gently reclining back create the perfect lounge chair, ideal for relaxed reading or fireside seating. The chair features a classic high back with subtle button detailing, beautifully shaped rolled arms, and a deep, comfortable seat cushion, all upholstered in a tasteful neutral houndstooth fabric that complements both traditional and contemporary interiors. The upholstery was professionally completed approximately two to three years ago and has seen only light use since, remaining in lovely condition overall with only a few very minor marks consistent with gentle use. Raised on elegant turned mahogany front legs with original castors, the chair retains excellent period character while offering practical mobility and strong decorative presence. The rear legs sweep subtly backwards in the traditional Victorian manner, enhancing both stability and visual balance. Presented in excellent condition throughout, with strong frame, quality upholstery, and superb comfort, this is a highly usable and beautifully styled antique armchair ready for immediate placement in the home. A classic late Victorian country house chair with warmth, comfort, and enduring English elegance.
