A refined Emilian console table from Ferrara, dating back to the Louis XV period, crafted in the 18th century from fine walnut burl.The elegant structure is characterized by a wavy, sinuous line on both the front and sides, a distinctive element of the Louis XV style, which gives the piece a remarkable visual lightness and formal dynamism. The contoured top harmoniously follows the profile of the underlying structure, creating a highly balanced and refined ensemble.The front houses a large drawer, internally divided into practical compartments. The surfaces are embellished with burl grain, carefully selected and arranged to enhance its natural design, framed by light-colored wood trim that emphasizes the piece's wavy profile.The rounded corner uprights and saber-shaped legs
