Description

Lucien-Victor Guirand de Scévola (1871-1950) Lucien-Victor Guirand de Scévola was a talented and eclectic French painter, who distinguished himself as a portraitist, decorator, illustrator and important figure in the official art of the Third Republic. After studying at the Beaux-Arts in Paris, he became a pupil of Fernand Cormon and Pierre Dupuis. His style is characterized by Symbolist inspiration and a mastery of pastel, a technique in which he excelled and which won him widespread success. During the First World War, Guirand de Scévola played an unexpected and decisive role: he was the creator and leader of France's first military camouflage unit. Under his leadership, the "camoufleurs" developed innovative techniques for concealing equipment and positions at the
