Description

Gustave Hervigo 1896-1993French Navy painter, explorer and tireless observer of the world, he developed a deeply personal body of work, nourished by his encounters, his travels and his taste for landscapes as well as scenes of life.Born of a craftsman's background, he grew up with his father a bourrelier and worked from an early age in this world of leather and leather goods.Although he had no traditional academic training, he benefited from the advice of the Rambolitan painter Henri Laigneau, who encouraged him in his artistic research.After the First World War, during which he continued his artistic activity while working in luxury leather goods, he settled in Paris.His real recognition began in 1925, when he presented a work at the Salon des Indépendants. He then became a
