Wall-mounted Lantern Made Of Wrought Iron And Blown Glass - Late 19th / Early 20th Century

600 EUR

Period : 20th century

Condition : Bon état

Material : Wrought iron

Description

A striking hanging lantern crafted between the late 19th and early 20th centuries from wrought iron and blown glass, characterized by exceptional craftsmanship and a particularly refined design.The rare decorative motif featuring coiled serpents adorning the upper part of the structure and the suspension chains is particularly charming. This unusual ornamental motif suggests a possible original use in a pharmacy or antique apothecary, evoking the traditional symbolism associated with the art of pharmacy.The blown glass panels, with their warm amber tones and enhanced by central circular elements, give the object a strong decorative personality and a pleasing visual presence.The lantern is in good overall condition, with normal signs of wear consistent with its age
