half of the 20th century. Originally from the Turin area, he devoted much of his work to Alpine landscapes, with a particular focus on the eastern regions. His painting is characterized by a direct, observational naturalism, devoid of rhetorical flourishes, and by an atmospheric rendering that favors clear, bright light and a meticulous depiction of mountain topography. He worked during a transitional period between late naturalism and early modern trends, yet maintained a traditional approach focused on the immediate perception of the landscape.
