Description

Pair of cut crystal decanters attributed to the Baccarat manufacture, made during the Restoration period. The body adopts an ovoid shape entirely covered with a cut known as "à gros diamants", composed of deeply hollowed diamond-shaped facets that capture and diffuse light in a geometric play characteristic of the first half of the XIXe century.The neck is punctuated by several registers of superimposed cuts and receives a faceted, point-cut stopper, echoing the decorative vocabulary of the set. This production is in line with the research carried out by French crystal makers in the aftermath of the Empire, a period during which crystal cutting took center stage in the ornamentation of tableware.It should be remembered that Baccarat productions from the first XIXe century were generally unsigned.
