Description

Grande Paire de Porte-Fleurs en Fer Forgé Rouge Sang-de-Boeuf - Début du XXe Siècle Rare and attractive pair of wrought-iron flower stands dating from the early 20th century, combining architectural elegance, functionality and strong decorative presence. Resting on wide, four-pronged bases mounted on their original castors, these flower stands feature a particularly harmonious, slender silhouette. Their design happily combines the visual lightness of wrought-iron work with a sturdy structure designed to accommodate large planters, planters or decorative vases. The overall design evokes the refined world of Art Nouveau with its soft curves, stylized plant lines and shapes inspired by the ancient lyre. The elegant curved elements surrounding the central shaft bring movement and lightness to the whole, while the openwork baskets located in the middle section underline the quality of the craftsmanship. The upper part is composed of a support designed to hold a cachepot or an antique vase, offering an ideal presentation for showcasing garden pieces, cast-iron, terracotta or reconstituted stone vases. Their substantial height immediately creates a focal point in a garden, conservatory, orangery or grand entrance. The superb oxblood-red patina acquired over time reinforces their authentic character and gives them an aesthetic particularly sought-after in the world of antique garden furniture. This warm hue admirably enhances the volumes and architectural lines of these decorative pieces. Beyond their primary function, these flower holders are veritable displays designed to magnify large antique vases, planters or decorative urns. They represent an excellent choice for antique dealers, decorators, interior designers and merchants specializing in high-end garden furniture. This pair would naturally find its place in a character property, elegant terrace, conservatory or antique gallery. It would also be ideally suited to the garden furniture trade in L'Isle-sur-la-Sorgue, as well as to the American market, which is particularly fond of this type of generously-sized decorative antique furniture. This is an unusual pair offering remarkable decorative quality and exceptional presence. Dimensions Height: 140 cm Width: 30 cm Maximum diameter: 55 cm Era Early 20th century. Material Wrought iron.
