Description

Beautiful mouth-blown glass spouted jug , in perfect condition, with a swollen baluster form and a decoration inspired by Venetian Renaissance models.
It features:
- a gadrooned body obtained by blowing into a mould,
- a fine twisted thread applied hot around the neck,
- a richly modelled handle adorned with small decorative drops typical of historicist Murano production,
- a circular foot shaped at the pontil, attesting to high-quality craftsmanship.Now a purely decorative object, but originally intended for table service -- water, light wine or scented water -- in keeping with traditional Italian Renaissance usage.The piece belongs to the historicist repertoire developed by Murano glassworks in the late 19th century, particularly by the Salviati firm, which skilfully reinterpreted 16th-century Venetian glass forms and techniques.

The purity of the glass, the finesse of the applied elements and the balance of proportions confirm a superior level of manufacture.Period: late 19th - early 20th century (circa 1880-1900)
Attribution: attributed to Salviati, Murano, Italy. This firm promoted the Renaissance revival style from the 1870s onwards.
