A terracotta sculpture showing two putti on an earthen or stone elevation, surrounding a reclining vase from which water is flowing. One of the putti is sitting with his torso turned towards the second. His left arm is placed on the vase, also bent but suspended. A drape covers the lower part of his back. The second putto, meanwhile, is leaning on his knees, turning towards the first. It is also covered by a drape, placed on his right shoulder, falling over the rest of his body, in a way that hides his crotch. He holds a bowl (on his right hand) and a dove (on his left hand).
