Description

Circa 1800 - 1825Paisley or Edinburgh - ScotlandBeautiful ivory wool and silk fashion shawl woven on a Tire handloom and dating from the Regency Period. This shawl is finely woven in wool and silk twill, with the wefts cut on the reverse side using the "Lancé Découpé" technique. The central reserve is cream twill, with silk weft and chiane. Scotland exported this type of shawl stole, directly inspired by antique fashion, throughout Europe. It is an almost identical replica of Indian shawls, with a row of eight Botehs at the ends and a gallery of palmettes. The side borders are sewn, as was common in Scottish Paisley shawls. The floral decoration on the botehs is inspired by the thousand flowers of India in the Mughal period, with an angular design known as baton rompu,
