Description

Elegant jewelry bracelet in 750/°° white gold (18 KT, hibou hallmark) dating from the 1970s, featuring remarkable setting work and an aesthetic emblematic of the luxury of this period. The central oval motif, with particularly harmonious proportions, is adorned with a deep blue cabochon sapphire, surrounded by a large pavage of brilliant-cut diamonds offering remarkable sparkle. The bracelet's shoulders are extended by a delicate mesh richly set with diamonds, giving the whole a great visual fluidity while retaining an assertive presence on the wrist. The bracelet features a particularly successful semi-rigid structure, naturally retaining its oval shape while benefiting from a discreet articulation that gives it flexibility and comfort when worn. This refined design allows it to elegantly hug the wrist without ever sagging, combining the presence of a rigid bracelet with the comfort of an articulated one. The compact architecture of the central motif, combined with the finesse of the mesh work and the abundance of paving, perfectly illustrates the sophisticated elegance of 1970s jewelry, a period during which prestige jewelry prioritized comfort, suppleness and luminous richness all at once. The bracelet features an invisible ratchet clasp perfectly integrated into the overall design, undetectable when closed, and secured by a safety eight ensuring excellent security when worn. A timeless piece of jewelry, both sophisticated and easy to wear, highlighting the striking contrast between the velvety blue of the cabochon sapphire and the brilliance of the diamonds.
