Description

Schoollate 17th century: "The Denial of Saint Peter", oil on copper 22.5 X 17.8 cm, unframed. Highly oxidized varnish, small dents, traces of binding at the four corners, chewed corners. The Apostle, recognizable by his incipient baldness, is depicted at the moment when, at prayer, he hears the cock crow after having told Caiaphas' servant three times that he did not know Jesus, as the latter had predicted... Rendered in a thick, textured material, emphasizing the folds of the Apostle's clothes and wrinkles of the Apostle, this painting will reveal all its qualities.
