Description

A notable exception among the cargo of this shipwreck, which consists almost entirely of blue-and-white porcelain pieces. The decoration, in cobalt blue and iron brown-red, was painted underglaze in a very pale celadon which is quite infrequent.Very few examples--featuring two different designs--were recovered during the excavation.This one is intact, with only a few minor firing defects on the glaze (photos 6 and 7).The interior has been deliberately left uncleaned, together with the base which still bears a few oyster shells attesting to its underwater origin.Height: 21 cm. Weight: 1545 g.The only two close pieces offered at the sale in Amsterdam in 2007 sold for 14,400 and 19,200 EUR (photo number eight).Ref.: (six last photos)Ng Dinh Chien, 2002: "The Ca Mau
