Description

A very elegant rug, traditionally woven and knotted using wool-on-wool techniques. One immediately notices a design inspired by the formerly nomadic Kazakh people. The pattern is not particularly conventional, featuring a central field in a deep, vibrant madder red. The unexpected and alluring presence of olive green tones makes it a highly sought-after piece. The rug is identified as a Kazak Borjalou. The white or ecru central medallion evokes a beautifully stylized scorpion. The entire composition of the rug seems to be organized around it. An intriguing and astonishing detail: the black section surrounding the scorpion is woven only--no knotted stitches! The scorpion thus appears in relief. Beauty lies in the details... The two circular medallions at each end of the points on the central field are typical of ancient Kazak rugs, like a signature. All these decorative aspects and this narrative vocabulary demonstrate the authenticity of this rug in a perfectly mastered balance. The field is framed by continuous geometric borders that create a sense of vitality. It also features the motif of flowing water, a symbol of movement and fertility. Another key feature is the very high-quality, almost silky wool. The pile is rather short, as is typical of most antique rugs from the Caucasus and Central Asia. The colors are deep and luminous, having retained their freshness over time. Pretty braided fringe at one end. Circa 1930 Perfect condition!! Dimensions: 255 x 150 cm
