Description

A set of four Art Deco armchairs in walnut and leather, made around 1940, that embodies an aesthetic that is both structured and warm, typical of French modernism between the two world wars. The carefully selected walnut forms a fluid structure where the armrests curve in a continuous motion, creating these side openings that lighten the silhouette and emphasize the style's distinctive geometry. The seat and backrest, upholstered in new brown leather, offer firm, enveloping comfort. The outline, accented by a regular row of tacks, adds a touch of character, recalling the precise finishes of the period's cabinetmaking workshops. The slightly tapered legs extend the design's momentum and anchor each armchair in understated elegance. Presented as a set, these four armchairs form a cohesive and
