A magnificent Art Deco-era sculpture (circa 1930) depicting a draped female nude, elegantly reclining. This piece, made of glazed earthenware or ceramic, stands out for its stylized lines typical of the period and its superb patina with powdery shades (pink/beige) and a delicate nuanced effect. The piece is signed in relief on the base with "ODYV," the famous mark of the Berlot-Mussier pottery company based in Vierzon, particularly renowned for its mantelpieces and high-end animal and female sculptures during the Art Deco period.
