Description

Rare chest-sideboard, a solid oak Louis XV-style dresser dating from the 18th century. This high-quality regional piece is distinguished by its large upper drop-front chest, once used for storing bread, grain, or food supplies. The lower section opens via two molded doors, revealing a functional storage space. The elegance of its lines, its hoof-shaped legs, its scalloped panels, and its rounded posts reflect the Louis XV style as interpreted by 18th-century provincial craftsmen. The piece retains a beautiful authenticity as well as a warm, antique patina acquired over the centuries. It is presented with its freestanding oak wall-mounted plate rack, which hangs on the wall, allowing you to recreate the atmosphere of an old French country kitchen. Rustic furniture with character, now
