Description

Philippe Budelot (1770-1841) Tsar Alexander I of Russia in the Gardens of the Catherine Palace Oil on panel, circa 1820 Unsigned Dimensions: Panel: 53.5 x 72 cm Frame: 63.5 x 83 cm Philippe

Budelot was a student of the landscape painter Lazare Bruandet. The latter introduced him to the practice of plein air painting in the Paris region. Like his master, his paintings combine meticulous naturalism in the depiction of the landscape with picturesque touches introduced by the figures that enliven his works. As is often the case in Romantic landscapes, the figures were painted in collaboration with other artists. He exhibited regularly at the Salons from 1793 to 1841. He was appointed by Tsar Alexander I as director of the St. Petersburg porcelain manufactory. He created another painting related
