Description

A 19th-century bronze sculpture depicting a satyr serving wine, inspired by an ancient model discovered in Pompeii. Drawing on the artistic heritage of classical antiquity, the figure embodies the joyful and festive spirit associated with the companions of Dionysus (Bacchus), the god of wine, celebration, and fertility.The satyr is depicted in a dynamic pose, carrying or offering wine, a recurring theme in the decorative arts of ancient Rome. The sculptor skillfully captured the expressiveness of the features, the dynamism of the movement, and the mythological character of the figure, creating a composition full of charm and vitality.Inspired by the archaeological discoveries at Pompeii and Herculaneum, sculptures of this type became highly sought after in the 19th century, when collectors and artists
