Description

An elegant still life painted by Blanche Eglène-Surieux (1884-1944), a French artist associated with the Lyon School. The work depicts a bouquet of cream-yellow roses accompanied by a few mauve violets, arranged next to a stack of antique books. The composition, both intimate and refined, is distinguished by its soft light, balanced tones, and delicate rendering of the petals. The contrast between the freshness of the flowers and the weathered bindings of the books lends the entire scene a quiet, studious atmosphere. The motif of the books also lends a meditative quality to this floral scene. The work is painted in oil on a solid oak panel. It is signed in the lower right corner. The painting is presented in its imposing antique frame made of wood and gilded stucco.

The frame is adorned with highly relief foliage motifs in the corners and features a beautiful gold leaf finish, slightly weathered by time. Its deep profile particularly highlights the painting. A decorative and authentic work, suitable for both a classic interior and a more contemporary decor. It will naturally find its place in a library, an office, a living room, or within a collection dedicated to early 20th-century French painting. Condition The panel is in good overall condition. It has only a few very small chips along the edges, which do not significantly affect the viewing of the artwork. The paint layer is very well preserved. The frame has a slight patina, as well as small marks and signs of wear consistent with its age. The photographs are an integral part of the description.
