Wooden sculpture from the Black Forest* serving as a hat rack or coat rack, decorated with an ox head in the center surrounded by foliage, dating from the 19th century. This sculpture is in good condition and very decorative. Please note: slight signs of wear from age; see photos.* Black Forest Carved wooden objects from the Black Forest do not originate in Germany but were made in the Brienz region of Switzerland. The tradition of woodworking dates back many generations in this region; the locals continue the practice of wood carving on the facades of houses, furniture, and everyday objects. The carvers excel particularly in depicting wild animals in their natural habitats. In the 19th century, these naturalistic Black Forest carvings became very fashionable and highly
