Description

An elegant polychrome terracotta sculpture depicting the Madonna and Child, dating from between the late 15th century and the early 16th century, from central Italy. The work stands out for the tenderness of the faces and the naturalness of the composition: the Virgin, wrapped in a wide mantle with delicate chromatic highlights, cradles the Child seated on her lap in an intimate and maternal gesture. The modeling reveals an expert hand, capable of combining formal balance with expressive intensity, while traces of the original polychromy--still visible in the warm tones of the flesh and the refined details of the drapery--lend the sculpture an authentic and deeply evocative charm. The surface features a patina consistent with the period, with signs of wear and slight losses that attest to its history and authenticity,
